Currencies of the World

The table below lists the currencies and subcurrencies in use in more than 200 countries and territories around the world.

Country Name

We have used the popular rather than the formal names of countries and territories. For example, we list Korea, South, rather than Republic of Korea.

Currency Name

In many cases a number of countries share the same currency name, but not the same currency. To lessen confusion, we have included the country name in the currency column (e.g., Australian Dollar, U.S. Dollar, Hong Kong Dollar).

ISO Codes

The International Organization for Standardization (ISO, not IOS) has established alpha and numeric codes for all currencies. These are the formal codes that banks and currency dealers use.

Symbols

Most every currency in the world has a symbol or abbreviation that is more commonly used than the formal ISO codes. For example, $, £ and ¥.

The Euro

On January 1, 2002, the Euro replaced the national currencies of 12 European Union (EU) countries including Austria, Belgium, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal and Spain. At the same time, many other countries and territories that used the former currencies of these countries converted as well. For example, French Guiana used the French franc but now also uses the Euro.

Hard vs. Soft Currencies

Some currencies are “soft,” meaning they are either legally inconvertible, or simply undesirable because they are not stable. “Hard” currencies, on the other hand, are convertible and stable and, therefore, most often used in international transactions. Hard currencies include the EU Euro, U.S. dollar, British Pound Sterling, Japanese Yen and Swiss Franc.

Exchange Rate and Currency Information

Exchange rates can and do fluctuate, sometime wildly. The traditional method for learning about rates used to include the Monday edition of the Wall Street Journal, other major newspapers, and banks and foreign exchange firms like Thomas Cook. Now, of course, instant information is available on the Internet at services such as:

Oanda (www.oanda.com),

Bloomberg (www.bloomberg.com), and

Universal Currency Converter (www.xe.com).

Two other great sources of currency information include the Pacific Exchange Rate Service at:

http://fx.sauder.ubc.ca/currency_table.html and the UN Operational Rates of Exchange at www.un.org/Depts/treasury.

The information below is current as of September 2006.
